Office Hours: Monday, 12 noon-1:00 pm, Wednesday, 12 noon-1:00 pm,

Friday 12 noon-1:00 (by appointment only)

Introduction to the Academic Concerns of the Course

What did Latin America mean to Jewish history? What did Jews mean to Latin American history? What do we learn about Latin American history when we look at the place of Jews within it?

This course will explore the Jewish experience in Latin America and will use it as a window to understand broader trends in Latin American history. On the one hand, we will be interested in what it meant to be a Jew in Latin America at different points in time. Who was a Jew? What did being Jewish mean to different historical actors and what sorts of conflicts arose as a result of multiple understandings of Jewishness?

On the other hand, we will explore how Jewish Latin American history reveals the ways in which Latin American societies functioned on economic, social and political levels. Who had power in Latin America and who did not? What are the different types of power in Latin American societies and when and how did different forms interact and become important in different contexts? Who was excluded from full participation in Latin American societies and why? Who decided?

The course will draw on scholarship, primary sources, and literature in order to provide a more holistic picture of Latin American Jewish history.

Goals of the course:

- Provide an introduction to Latin American Jewish history
- Provide an introduction to key issues in Latin American history
- Teach students how historians think about events and changes over the course of time
- Teach students how to analyze primary and secondary sources

-Enhance critical thinking and writing skills

Important note about the readings: Please note that the readings have been selected to complement each other. Part of the course's purpose is to explore the relationship of the Jewish experience in Latin America with broader questions about Latin American society. The lectures will help you to draw connections between the two and to understand why they have been selected to be read together. Weekly one-page reading journals will also help facilitate this process.

Weekly One-Page Reading Journals: To aid you in your understanding of the materials and in drawing connections among readings, you will be responsible for writing a one-page reading journal to be emailed to me no later than 5 pm on Thursday. In these journals, you will discuss the links you see among the various readings in order to help us draw connections between Jewish experiences and the societies in which they lived. Also include any questions that emerge as you consider the week's readings as a unit. You may skip one of the one-page reading journals during any week of the semester you choose.

Lectures and Discussions:

Mondays and Wednesdays will include lectures with time for discussion and questions from the class. Fridays will be dedicated to dialogue among the students with the instructor about the readings and will often feature multimedia activities, including primary document analyses, film screenings, Latin American Jewish music, among other activities, with an eye toward helping you appreciate various facets of Latin American Jewish history.

Reading Materials: All course materials are available on the course website on Learn@UW. Please bring the reading materials for the week to Friday discussion sections.

Evaluation

Grades will be calculated as follows:

Weekly response papers: 10%

-These will be graded on a check, check-plus, check-minus, no-journal-received basis.

Participation in class (reading, discussion): 20%

Documentary analysis presentations in class: 10%

Essay 1:30%

Thesis exercise and bibliography: 15%

Final draft of paper:85%

Essay 2: 30%

Thesis exercise and bibliography: 15%

Final draft of paper: 85%

In-class Student Presentations of Documentary Analysis

Students will present their analyses of a set of historical documents in class once in the semester. Students will sign up for a week in which they will analyze documents and work in pairs/groups of up to four and present their findings to the class, indicating what insights the documents provide to the overarching themes of the course and/or the main topic of the course in that week. Further instructions and guidance for primary document analysis will be provided by the instructor and handouts will be available on the course website on Learn@UW. On the day students present to the class, they will, in conjunction with the instructor, help facilitate class discussion of the week's main topics and how the documents they've analyzed shed light on the readings and themes of the week.

Essays

Criteria for grading will be distributed at the beginning of the semester.

The first essay will be a 5-7 page paper on colonial Latin American Jewish history. The paper will be in response to an instructor-provided prompt (provided well in advance) of one aspect of the colonial Jewish experience in one of the countries explored in class. Students will include all readings (documents and articles/chapters) from the syllabus as well as 2 additional primary sources and at least four additional secondary sources that address the student's paper topic. Students will sign up to meet with the instructor individually on Friday, February 24th between 11 am and 1 pm; these meetings are mandatory. The final draft of the paper is due on Friday, March 9th by 5 pm.

The second essay will be a 7-10 page paper on some aspect of the national period in Latin American Jewish history. Students may choose to focus on one country or compare Brazil and Argentina. With prior instructor approval, students may address the history of Jews outside Argentina and Brazil, provided there are sufficient sources in English to address the topic and complete the assignment. Students will include at least seven primary sources (including those on the syllabus) and ten secondary sources (including those on the syllabus). Students will sign up to meet with the instructor individually on Monday, April 23rd (11 am-12 noon), Wednesday, April 25th (11 am-12 noon) or Friday, April 27th (11 am-12 noon); these meetings are mandatory. The final paper is due Wednesday, May 16th by 5 pm.

Thesis exercises

To aid students in their research, they will complete a thesis exercise (handout to be provided in class) that indicates the student's thesis (topic and research question to be pursued), provisional hypothesis (argument), and a complete bibliography of sources to be employed in the paper.

The thesis exercise for the first paper is due Friday, February 17th.

The thesis exercise for the second paper is due Friday, April 20th.

Drafts of Papers:

I am willing to read drafts of papers up until two weeks before the date they are due to be handed in. After that point, I am available to discuss specific concerns and questions about your papers but will no longer read drafts.

Late Papers:

Extensions must be requested a minimum of 48 hours in advance of the assignment due date. Papers handed in late without prior authorization will lose half a grade for each 24 hours that they are late. Emergencies that arise will be dealt with on a case-by-case basis.

Classroom Policies:

Students are permitted to use their laptops/netbooks for note-taking purposes only. Please shut off cell phones in the classroom.

Email policies:

Please allow me 48 hours to respond to emails. Feel free to use email for questions related to course requirements, to set up appointments for consultations and the like. For substantive and conceptual questions about course content, please come to office hours as questions of this nature generally cannot be adequately addressed through email.

Special Needs

If you need special accommodations, please contact me within the first two weeks of the semester so that we can make arrangements to meet your needs.
